

New CEO: Martin Plüss

Back in 1983, Jakob Gilgen took up his role as part of the family company's second generation, with responsibility for the management of Gilgen Door Systems AG. After thirty-four successful years in his post, he will be handing the baton over to his deputy Martin Plüss with effect from 1 January 2018.

Martin Plüss started to prepare for his successor role at Gilgen Door Systems two years ago, gaining full insights into all the areas and issues pertaining to Gilgen Door Systems AG, as he gradually took over the management responsibilities concerned. He has a wide range of expertise, recognised both within Switzerland and internationally, coupled with proven management experience. His previous career has seen him make a significant contribution to the success of several market-leading industrial companies.

Jakob Gilgen will continue to play an active role at Gilgen Door Systems AG after the formal handover, with management-board responsibility for special tasks and assistance to the the supervisory board.

This transfer of management responsibilities from Jakob Gilgen to Martin Plüss will ensure continuity in terms of business development and customer relations, thereby leaving Gilgen Door Systems AG well equipped to face future challenges.
